

connect:ID Session Highlight - Keynote Speakers

The largest gathering of identity solutions experts and organizations in North America will take place at the connect:ID conference and exhibition on April 30th - May 2nd, held at the Walter E. Washington Convention Center Washington, DC. Now for the 5th year, the International Biometrics+Identity Association (IBIA) has partnered with UK-based Science Media Partners (SMP) to host the leading developers of identity technologies, as well as the companies and government agencies that rely on them.

The event will offer insights on today's most pressing identity challenges from some of the biggest names in industry, government, law, and academia, including two well-known and highly regarded Keynote Speakers.

Professor Jonathan Turley of the George Washington University School of Law, who is the second most-cited legal scholar in the United States and a household name from his frequent media appearances, will deliver the morning keynote address on Tuesday, May 1st. Professor Turley will focus on the constitutional framework surrounding the issues of identity, privacy and anonymity in today's world.

Then, on Wednesday, May 2nd, Bryan Hurd, previous Director of Intelligence for the Digital Crimes Unit within the Microsoft Cyber Crime Center, will deliver the morning keynote address on the dark side of identity. Mr. Hurd, who previously created the Navy's first Cyber Counterintelligence program and also served as Director of Terrorist Identities at the National Counterterrorism Center, will discuss how to target individuals who seek to hide their identities to commit terrorist acts and other crimes, while still respecting the privacy of the general public.
